A Warning to American Pleasure-Seekers.

[From our own correspondent.]

NEWPORT, Sept. 4, 1869.

I wrote last summer, while I was at Long Branch, of the changes of the season, and of the new features which were then coming into fashion. I now write from Newport, and call the Wide and Free-

NEWPORT'S OLD CHARM.

Newport, it is needless to say, has nearly all the old charm of the summers, and retains the old place in the affections of the people. The Bay and the Ocean are the same, and the drives and walks are as delightful as ever. The old people, who have been coming here for years, and who have their own cottages, and their own ways of living, are all here, and the place is simply what the villages on the Hudson River and on Long Island, and all the watering-places on the Atlantic coast, were in the days of our fathers. Each year, as it comes, adds a few more cottages to the number, and a few more families to the population, but the change is so gradual that it is hardly perceptible. Newport is Newport, and will remain so, I suppose, as long as the world lasts.

On the Atlantic coast of New Jersey, many miles of sea-shore have been, in the words of Artemus Ward, "staked out for future cities," and the most incredible reports in the vicinity of these cities, Ocean Grove, Asbury Park, Long Branch, and Cape May, are circulated and believed by the people. Each of these places has been "boomed" for years, and each has had its day of prosperity. For the present, Long Branch is the most fashionable of the watering-places, and Saratoga, the White Mountains and Niagara are our great resort; but neither of them is organized upon the French plan, and neither of them has established rooms for the free association and regimen of society. Each of them has its "Big Trees," its "Flume," its "Old Man of the Mountain," its "Natural Bridge," and its "Falls," which, with some few other natural curiosities, are heavily patronized by the people, and are the great attractions of the season.

On the Atlantic coast, Cape May, which was for years the most fashionable resort in the country, is now almost deserted. Long Branch and Newport are the great rivals, and the competition between them is very close. The Long Branch hotels are, on the whole, the best conducted, and the Long Branch people are more hospitable and more pleasant to strangers than the people of Newport. Long Branch, however, is a new place, and has not the old-time charm which Newport has. Newport is the place for the old families, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old hotels, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old boarding-houses, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old cottages, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old people, and Long Branch for the young people. Newport is the place for the old fashions, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old dinners, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old drives, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old walks, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old bathing, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old dancing, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old flirtations, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old gossip, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old scandal, and Long Branch for the new. Newport is the place for the old everything, and Long Branch for the new everything.

I enjoy them all, and I suppose I am not alone in thinking that the variety of the watering-places is one of the most delightful features of the social life of America.

Saratoga will probably grow more fashionable with the increase of wealth in the country. The White Mountains and Saratoga are our great resort;

Suggestion Regarding an Increase in the Internal Revenue of Taxation—Economy Suggested.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune:

In the year 1791 the first act was levied in England upon spirituous liquors, and it was a tax of 1s. per gallon on stills, under which system a considerable portion of the revenue was derived. It continued in force until 1802, when it was repealed, and the duty was increased to 2s. per gallon. In 1803 another increase was made, and the duty was raised to 3s. per gallon. In 1804 another increase was made, and the duty was raised to 4s. per gallon. In 1805 another increase was made, and the duty was raised to
